

APEX

The primary natural predator in any given warzone is defined by the UCM's Science Division as the 'Apex'. Given the size and power of the other species present on the Cradle Worlds, it's fair to say that anything that eats them is bound to be potent. Many of these species feature chameleon-like adaptive colourisation, allowing them to blend in seamlessly with any environment on both visible and infrared spectra.

Some of these creatures are truly nightmarish, easily capable of ripping a main battle tank to shreds, should the mood take them. These animals are accustomed to being the most formidable beings around so view any intrusion as a threat worthy only of immediate slaughter.

They are unbelievably fast, vicious, highly intelligent, and ruthless hunters. Often, they are feared by ground troops far more than the enemy. Such is their sheer lethality, it's whispered they may have been genetically enhanced sometime in the distant past, possibly by the Shaltari, to cull local fauna populations and to provide a truly challenging species to hunt.

The Apex can be included in any game of Operation Artemis and replaces one of the Minotaurs on the Fauna player's side.

Roar: When this model is destroyed, add 4 to the Noise.

Genetic Modification: At the start the game the Fauna player rolls a D3 and applies the result for the rest of the game:

- 1: Ferrum Apex: Killing Tools gain Penetrator.
- 2: New Eden Apex: Any Attack made against the Apex with a Non-Base contact weapon only scores Successes on a 5+.
- 3: Maganum Apex: Increase the Armour of the Apex to 5.
